For the first time in two years, Call of Duty esports will return to the 4v4 format, which essentially means that one player from each team has already been or will be removed. This could mean a serious shake-up of some of our favourite lists, with underperforming players having to start shopping around options to stay in the Call of Duty League. While many fans and players have preferred 4v4 in the past, the loss of roster spots has made some players start to worry about their own prospects going forward, and that means we're guaranteed to see some big name replacement jerseys by the time the Black Ops Cold War season kicks off. The CDL free agency window officially opened on September 13, when teams began signing players for new contracts and even making announcements about who they were acquiring for the upcoming season. Under the official CDL registry building rules, at 11:59pm PT on September 13, any player whose contract has not been renewed with their current team officially becomes a free agent, but teams can formally apply for a contract extension until September 6 at 11:59pm PT. As stated in the rules, no agreement between the player and the team, which they did not represent in CDL 2020 until 12:00 am PT on September 14, can not be reached, although discussions can obviously take place in the run-up to this date. Be sure to check back on this page throughout the season to keep up with all the roster changes that are happening in the run-up to the 2021 CDL season. 10 30 Game bought at IG I think it is considered false advertising.
